So Sorry But Your Position Has Been Eliminated!

Whether you are unemployed or gainfully employed, everyone needs to be thinking ahead and looking into what to do if your position has been eliminated.

Our founder Ken Selzer says, "When your position is eliminated, the two best ways to find another great position are via your own personal network and engaging a professional recruiter that is savvy in your industry and discipline."

If you want to learn more about how to do this, contact any of our recruiters.

Revenue Declines Are Just Beginning As U.S. Budget Cuts Loom

In the cyclical ebb and flow of the defense market, finding an inflection point - the moment when boom turns into downturn - can be difficult. This time, it's obvious. Only two of the top dozen companies on this year's Defense News Top 100 list saw defense revenue growth, with combined defense revenue for the Top 100 companies dropping by about 1 percent to $414.3 billion, down from $418.8 billion in 2010. In the previous year's list, total revenue grew by more than 4 percent.

Stick Out from the Applicant Database

There is no doubt that the US economy is on the mend, unemployment has been falling steadily since reaching a 30 year high back in 2009, and growth is nearly five times as much as at this point last year. And, as we reported earlier candidate confidence has returned as MRI network reported a surge in resignations as applicants flock to the jobs boards to advance their careers which have lain dormant during the grips of the recession that we are now emerging from.

This means that now is the time of the candidate, but even so competition for jobs remains strong with metro areas like Riverside, CA reporting 6 applicants per job, Miami at 5 applicants per post, Los Angeles at 4 applicants per post. Added to this, many of your job search skills may have grown rusty as a result of the recession induced 'stay put' syndrome, and so I thought it would be a good time to give some tips and advice on how to get your resume to stand out from others in the recruiter's trusty applicant database.

Japan Passes Law Permitting Military Space Development

Tokyo - The Upper House of Japan's Diet June 20 passed legislation that shifts control of the nation's space policy and budget, and opens the door to military space development programs with an emphasis on space-based missile early warning.

The raft of legislation, based on the Bill to Amend the Law of Establishment of the Cabinet Office that was sent to the Diet on Feb. 14, enables the Prime Minister's Cabinet Office to take control of the planning and budgeting of Japan's government space program. It also removes an article in a prior law governing the Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (JAXA), the nation's equivalent to NASA, which had restricted JAXA's ability to pursue military space programs
